

Not tonight, dear, I've got a headache

...and it sure is a doozey. This maintainer received a head wound while running to complete a job. He forgot to look out for antennas on the underside of a P-3 and ran into one of them. He hit the antenna so hard that it knocked him to the deck, leaving him with a gaping head wound. It took 21 staples to fix this Sailor, but wearing a cranial could have prevented the injury.

Awareness of your surroundings and donning the proper gear can save you from one zinger of a headache.